MAKING OF AN AMERICAN

DR. ARMITAGE, AMERICAN.

This picture will be recognized in and out of the clubs as that of Dr. Edward Armitage, once an Englishman to the manner born, who has lately been converted to things American. There is nothing in the proximity of the large naval gun that is related to his change of nationality. Despite the prevailing rumor, it was not that terrifying weapon on the battleship Georgia which convinced him that it would be unsafe to remain a foreigner. On the contrary, the process of conversion was one of intellect, not nerves. Dr. Armitage heard the speech of Rudolph Spreckels before the Commercial Club and made up his mind that America needed more personal sacrifices on the altar of reform. So he has taken out his first papers and will, unless the Federal court asks him if he would fight King Edward on occasion, proceed to master the American dialect and become a citizen and a reformer.

For he will not be a Rooshan
Nor a Britisher nor Prooshan,
But an A-mer-i-can!
And in spite of the temptation
To support the mother nation,
He's no more an En-lish-man.

A SHEAF OF ISLAND VERSE.

HAWAII, ISLAND.

By Sanford B. Dole.

'Mid fair outlook of seas and skies,
Like maidens' breasts her mountains
Rise

With fragrant bosoms warm between,
Where glades primeval sleep serene
And clouds, like filmy lace, lie low
And ocean gales more softly blow.

The wild horse braves her crests of snow
Where Pele's fires dim and glow.
And sea-birds chant their morning hymn
Above the burning crater rim.

The salt waves cool the lava flows,
Which, surging from the upper snows,
Invade the domain of the sea
To build the shores that are to be.

O, land of youth and soul's desire,
Of forests cool and heart of fire,
Of fertile fields and plains of rock,
Of growing coasts and earthquake shock!

Be mine the happy lot to climb
Upon thy mountain tops sublime,
To view thy fiery fountains play
And pale the sunshine of the day,
To brave the angry waves that dash Against thy shores with roar and crash.

To lave my limbs in mountain streams
Where down the cliffs the cascade gleams,
And lay my ashes at the last Within thy caverns, dim and vast,
Where sacred chiefs undreaming sleep
And wooden gods weird vigils keep.

THE MOONLIGHT SONATA.

By Agnes Crary Weaver.

From off long curves of yellow shining sand,
From rocky headlands, softened in the light

That comes between the sunset and the night,
The tide with murmur low slips from the strand.

But when the moon shines full o'er sea and land
To her sweet influence all the waters leap

In ancient rapture; deep calls unto deep In mighty chords as from a master's hand.

So in the symphony I catch the song
The ebbing tide sings at the close of day.

Again I hear the sea's deep anthem roll.
But sweeter, subtler measures than belong

To singing waves are here; for in thy lay
Like Undine, hath the moonlight found its soul.

A HALF-WHITE GIRL.

By Sanford B. Dole.

From cloth of gold of Eastern looms
And whirl and glare of city rooms,
She fled away to woodland blooms.
In softly swaying holoku,

Her bare feet wet with morning dew,
She strayed upon the hills she knew;
She climbed among the waterfalls
Where streamlet unto streamlet calls

Amid the sombre canyon walls,
And at some placid pool between,
Where forest trees together lean Making, untaught, a perfect screen.

She staid and listened for some sound
Of man or beast that lingering round,
Might trespass on her chosen ground.
The oos sang their roundelay;

Liwis flashed—a crimson ray Athwart the shadows of the day;
A lizard rustled in the sod;
The bamboo swayed its slender rod;
None saw her but the birds and God.
Then, like expectant chrysalis,
She shed her clothes as things amiss
And radiant stood for winds to kiss.
She loosed her dark hair to the breeze
And, so arrayed unto her knees,
She stole among the whispering trees
And climbed upon the rocks that lie
In primal masonry on high,
And stood outlined against the sky.
The trade wind frolicked with her hair,
The sun shone on her body fair,
All nature did her homage there;
And she, there standing in the sun,
Was with all other nature one,
And felt its currents through her run.
Too soon,—alas! in sinuous grace
She ran with swiftly flying pace
And boldly sprang from that high place,
And like a meteor in its flight
Or unsheathed knightly sabre bright,
She flashed one moment in the light,
And then, in watery eclipse
From velvet toes to finger tips,
Went out that sweet apocalypse.

PESSIMISTIC.

"Talk about pessimists," said the man who sells farm implements, "I ran across an old farmer up state who was pretty near the limit. He had been grumbling about the condition of things generally, and I thought I'd show him that he was better off than he supposed himself to be.

"You've had good prices all the year, I understand," said I.
"Pretty good," he grudgingly admitted.

"In fact, prices are as high as you could reasonably expect," I remarked.
"Possibly they be," he agreed.

"And," I continued triumphantly,
'you've grown the biggest crops you ever did.'

"What if I did?" he argued.

"Don't that exhaust the soil just that much more?"

A LUCKY FUGITIVE.

Ex-Governor William S. Taylor of Kentucky is a lucky man. After having been indicted for participation in the murder of Governor Goebel, he fled to Indiana. The chief executive of the Hoosier state was a Republican, and when Governor Beekham made a requisition for Taylor it was refused.
Now there is to be inaugurated a Democratic governor of Indiana, and if there should come a request from Kentucky for Mr. Taylor it would be granted. But no such request is to be made. Kentucky has a Republican governor and he is willing that Taylor remain where he is.

THE AUTO TYPEWRITER.

"The typewriter people are certainly slow."

"In what respect?"
"To cling to the bell. Why don't they introduce a machine that will honk at the end of a line?"

NONE EXEMPT.

"I have my troubles."

"Why, you are rich, healthy, respected."

"Still, I have my troubles. I have to listen to other people's."

AS TO CHOLLY.

"I fear Cholly is unstable."

"Why so?"
"He changes his brand of cigarettes almost weekly, for one thing."

INUENDO.

"He says he spent Thanksgiving with his folks. Dined quietly at home."

"Dined quietly, eh? Then I'll bet there was no soup served."
